One does not have to look far, or closely, to discover that improvement has been made in the schools of Maine through the interest manifested and work done by parents, school officials, teachers and pupils. The time has arrived when a somewhat detailed statement of the facts is justified. Money. Many municipalities, at the last town meeting, voted larger sums for the maintenance of schools than were asked for by the school committees. This action indicates that the day has passed when voters are willing to sustain a motion that the amount required by law be raised for schools. It also shows they arc intelligently considering two questions: First, the needs of the schools and second, the extent to which their resources will allow their demands to be met. When these questions shall have been discussed and decided in the right spirit, the welfare of the school will be assured. Interest And Work. The evidences of an interest...
